

Building A Better Future Through Civic Partnership

The Centre for Inclusive Futures is a small London-based development agency with the mission of supporting efforts to develop sustainable communities which include everyone as equal citizens. Its Director, David Towell, has published a series of short articles which aspire to offer resources for local leaders actively engaged in advancing this mission. It has recently issued Building A Better Future Through Civic Partnership, a pamphlet which offers a framework for civil society associations and local government to work together in improving their localities.

Other resources include Networking For Social Change a complementary pamphlet (based on fieldwork in Colombia) and a full review of Robin Hambleton's excellent book Leading The Inclusive City. This and other material is available on-line in the Library of the Centre for Welfare Reform here.

Published 28.07.2015